

Journal of Operations Management Incoming Co-Editors-in-Chief Announcement

Journal of Operations Management is pleased to introduce Thomas Choi (Arizona State University) and Daniel Guide (Pennsylvania State University) as the incoming Co-Editors-in-Chief, starting 1st July, 2011.

Both are excellent researchers, with very strong reputations in the field. Furthermore, they have been very professional and hard working Associate Editors for JOM over the past five years. Prof. Choi is well known for his theory based and insightful case-study research. Prof. Guide is one of the leaders in the area of green and sustainable operations. He takes a very empirically grounded approach to analytical modeling. We strongly believe that their complementary skills make them extremely well qualified to lead the future growth and continually increasing quality of the JOM. In addition, they plan to open up new areas of interest that will attract an even larger set of scholars into the JOM community.

Elsevier would like to take this opportunity to thank the outgoing Co-Editors-in-Chief, Kenneth Boyer and Morgan L. Swink, for their hard work on the journal over the past five years, and for their significant contribution to JOM's current strong position within the field.

Any papers submitted to JOM after 1st July will be handled by the incoming Editors, whilst Profs. Boyer and Swink will continue to process any papers that were under review before that date.
