

Sponsored Articles

- Elsevier's policy is not to charge subscribers for open access content and when calculating subscription prices only to take into account content published under the subscription model.
- Adjustments in individual journal list prices reflect a number of factors including growth in the number of articles published; impact factor; usage; and other revenue streams such as commercial contributions from advertising, reprints, and supplements.
- The uptake of sponsored open access in subscription journals remains small relative to these other factors and thus has a very small impact on journal list prices. In 2010, Elsevier published a total of 734 sponsored open access articles. In other words less than 1% of the articles in our subscription titles were sponsored open access articles.
- By comparison the number of articles published under the subscription model increases by around 3%-4% each year.
- Elsevier amends its journal list prices to account for each and every sponsored open access article. Our subscription customers are not charged for open access articles – we do not double dip.

Elsevier's sponsored open access charge is generally $3,000. This charge helps cover peer-review publishing activities such as managing article submission and peer review; typesetting, tagging and indexing of articles; hosting articles on dedicated servers; permanently preserving the published journal article; and much, much more. The fee excludes taxes and other potential author fees such as colour charges which if required are additional.
