

AORN JOURNAL
CONFLICT OF INTEREST/DISCLOSURE FORM

Each author must read and sign the following statement; if necessary, photocopy this form and distribute it to coauthors for their original signatures. It is important that you return this form to the Editorial Office as early as possible. Your manuscript will not be published unless this form is received.

The AORN Journal requires that all authors sign a declaration of conflicting interests. We will not reject manuscripts simply because of conflicting interest, but we will declare them to the readership. A conflicting interest exists when a professional judgment concerning a primary interest (such as patients' welfare or the validity or interpretation of research) may be influenced by a secondary interest (such as a financial gain or personal rivalry). If conflicts of interest are revealed after an article is published, a reasonable reader may feel misled or deceived.

The simplest remedy for conflict of interest is disclosure. In the Journal, disclosure will be achieved by the inclusion of a short footnote with each published article.

AORN defines financial relationships as those relationships in which the individual benefits by receiving:

- a salary, royalty, intellectual property rights, consulting fees, honoraria, ownership interest (eg, stocks; stock options; or other ownership interest, excluding diversified mutual funds), or other financial benefit.
- Financial relationships also can include contracted research where the institution receives a grant and manages the funds and an individual is the principal or named investigator on the grant.

Financial benefits are usually associated with roles such as employment, management positions, independent contractor relationships (including contracted research), consulting, speaking and teaching, membership on advisory committees or review panels, board membership, and other activities from which a fee is received or expected. These relationships include financial relationships of a family member.
