The power of effectively coordinated care

Care coordination and the patient

Healthcare costs are
75% higher for patients receiving uncoordinated care¹

Patients experiencing highly fragmented care have
2x as many primary care visits, and
6x as many specialist visits²

Educating and engaging patients in their self-care management activities with effective interprofessional care coordination can reduce annual Medicare costs by⁴

Patients experiencing lower levels of coordinated care are more likely to deviate from best clinical practices³

Care coordination and the clinician

55% of clinicians feel interprofessional practice offers opportunities for professional development⁴

85% of clinicians agree that coordinated, interprofessional practice increases their job satisfaction³

Care coordination and the organization

Effective care coordination increases HCAHPS ratings by an average of 2.3 percentage points³

Interprofessional collaboration:
- Increases operating margins by 71%
- Reduces emergency department visits by 28%
- Reduces inpatient admissions by 50%