
- You should use punctuation marks appropriately, following the above example. Blank, period, comma, colon, semicolon, etc. are regulated their arrangement.
- If there are more than six authors, list only the first six, and then add et al. to cover the other(s).
- The titles of journals should be abbreviated according to the style used in Index Medicus, which is found on the web.
- Reference style should follow the "Vancouver" style described in "Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals" (further information can be found at http://www.icmje.org.). Appropriate punctuation marks should be used.

- Issue number should be omitted if the page number starts at new volume.

- The full first page number and the shortened form for the last page number(s) of articles should be provided. Exs., 489-92; 191-5.

- If you quote from a book, a journal article, or a similar source that is written in a language other than English, you should indicate that language in curved parentheses after the title of the book or article. Ex., (in Japanese)

- Brain and Development is an international English science journal. References written in a language other than English should be used minimally, the fewest possible.

- Reference information should be indicated correctly, not from the database, but from the original paper if possible.
