Instructions for Research Notes

Research notes are not full academic papers but are discussion notes, seeking to advance a new idea, theoretical perspective, research program, or methodological approach in organization studies. As opposed to full research papers, research notes may follow a less strict paper outline but still needs to make a valuable contribution to the study of organization. That is, polemical clarity and rhetoric are important qualities of a readable and intriguing research note. When writing a research note, it is important that the author(s) are clear on what kind of contribution they want to make to the field of organization studies, that they are capable of advancing an intelligible and solid argument in favour of a particular theory, study, or methodology, and that they bring in a novel view to the attention of the journal’s readers. The role of the research note is thus not so much to further justify or support predominant theoretical perspectives but to serve as a form of incubator or laboratory for new thinking in the field of organization studies.

Research notes are preferable between 3,000 and 4,000 words (but up to 5,000 may be accepted under certain conditions) and are otherwise adhering to the research paper instructions regarding e.g., referencing and bibliographic information. Research notes are reviewed by the Editor-in-Chief and one or more Associate Editors. Research notes can also be invited by the editor or members of the editorial team in collaboration with the editor.

Instructions for Book Reviews

Our book review section contains three different types of book reviews.

First, ordinary reviews on recent books by well-known scholars, but also on more avantgarde or marginal works and on books published in languages other than English. SJM wants to provide the readers with reviews on interesting books that other major journals are unlikely to cover. Furthermore, reviews should cover an overview of the contents of the book as well as a critical account of the book, i.e. its merits and its shortcomings. Length of text should be around 1,100-1,500 words.

Secondly, we have vintage book reviews, i.e. reviews on classics in management. This type of book review primarily target, but are not exclusively restricted to, Scandinavian classics in which an overview of its contents should be provided as well as an account of what the current value is to today’s research and societal problems. Length of text should be around 1,100-1,500 words.

Third, there is the possibility to write book review essays. A book review essay implies reading and comparing several books in such a manner that the reviewer includes his/hers own original analysis of a management phenomenon. Such a review could either include books from different disciplines – an interdisciplinary approach – that taken together are relevant for Management, or include books from the same discipline. Length of text should a maximum of 2,000 words.
